Sixty-seven million years ago, a humid day in a subtropical forest of present-day South Dakota, off the western coast of the receding Western Interior Seaway. A group of Triceratops stops for a drink at a watering hole, unaware of the danger stalking them. A sudden crash in the undergrowth sends them scattering in a panic as a massive Tyrannosaurus rex thunders from the trees, isolating a juvenile for its charge. Recovering from its initial surprise, the young Triceratops realizes the window for flight has passed, but it is not defenseless...

Ambush at Hell Creek is inspired by the many fossils of T. rex and Triceratops that have been found in the Hell Creek Formation, sedimentary rocks that were deposited 68 to 66 million years ago in present-day Montana, Wyoming, North Dakota, and South Dakota.

The illustration for Ambush at Hell Creek was created by internationally-acclaimed paleo-artist Franco Tempesta, illustrator for several Smithsonian and National Geographic projects, winner of the Society of Vertebrate Paleontology's Lanzendorf-National Geographic PaleoArt Prize, and multiple winner of the International Contest of Dinosaur Scientific Illustration.
